Tulane graduate student speaks on entrepreneurship in Pakistan

October 02, 2017 3:15 PM
New Wave staff newwave@tulane.edu

Tulane University graduate student and 2015 Alvarez Spark Award recipient Sydney Gray travels to Pakistan this week for the U.S. Embassy’s Entrepreneurship Speaker Series. (Photo by Ryan Rivet)

Gray brings extensive experience in social innovation and entrepreneurship from work with local nonprofits Mama Maji and Propeller: A Force for Social Innovation. Mama Maji, co-founded by Gray, is dedicated to empowering women to change their world through water. In 2015, the organization received funding through the Phyllis M. Taylor Center for Social Innovation and Tulane University

Design Thinking Alvarez Spark Award to expand curriculum and pilot a program focused on storytelling, public speaking and crowdfunding with Tulane classes. Gray went on to be selected as an Ashoka U Emerging Innovator from candidates across the globe.