As students head home for the winter break, Tulane Career Services offers several pieces of advice that can help them prepare for the spring recruiting season. With spring deadlines for summer internships looming, it's a good idea to use the resources in this video to jump start your return to campus.

"It's not too early to narrow down internship opportunities for the summer," said Carla Coury, director of Tulane's Career Services. "Use the holiday break to research companies and industries of interest. Some of the most competitive opportunities at the most desirable companies are already posted."

Other tips from the video include updating your résumé, reaching out to Tulane alumni and activating your HandShake and Tulane Connect accounts.
