

Creating solutions

May 03, 2018 1:15 PM Sally Asher
sally@tulane.edu

Ishanya Narang, right, discusses ways to create justice for survivors of sexual assault during a poster session in the first-floor atrium of the Goldring/Woldenberg Business Complex at the A.B. Freeman School of Business. The event was the final project for students enrolled in Project IX: Student Design to End Sexual Assault, a course offered by the Phyllis M. Taylor Center for Social Innovation and Design Thinking. Student teams presented ways in which justice, community, education and dialogue can foster change in the current climate.

Tulane president Mike Fitts, center, listens as students present their ideas. Several senior administrators were on hand to consider the students' solutions.