

Focus on Obama and International Law

March 17, 2010 1:45 AM New Wave staff

newwave@tulane.edu

How has international policy shifted during the Obama Administration? That question forms the theme of a free symposium on Friday (March 19) at Tulane Law School.

The Tulane Journal of International and Comparative Law is hosting the event, entitled "Changing Course: The United States' Evolving Approach to International Law." Legal scholars and practitioners from Tulane and other universities will lead three panel discussions.

Topics to be discussed will be weapons non-proliferation, arms control and disarmament; climate change; and human rights in the "War on Terror."

The session begins at 9:30 a.m. in room 110 of Weinmann Hall. The symposium website provides the complete list of speakers and registration details.