A detail from “Land Memory Bank: Sovereignty, Uncertainty & Seeding Sustainability -- An Art Installation” by Monique Verdin, 2018, is an example of the struggle between Indigenous communities and environmental change. On Tuesday, April 2, scholars, artists and activists will present on the topic of sovereignty and Indigenous communities at the Second Annual New Orleans Center for the Gulf South Indigenous Symposium, whose 2019 theme is Sovereignty and the State: Indigenous Challenges to Imperial Claims.

The conference takes place from 8:30 a.m. to 5:30 p.m. in Qatar Ballroom in the Lavin-Bernick Center on the uptown campus.

Indigenous people have employed various strategies in the continuous fight for sovereignty over
The symposium will examine indigenous resistance in the form of environmental activism, cultural identity, basket weaving and plant knowledge, and will present new multidisciplinary research from Tulane students and Indigenous Tribal members.

Similar to last year’s Indigenous Symposium, the program will feature a territorial acknowledgement, archaeological discussion, dialogue on foodways and plant uses, a social activist Indigenous roundtable and a cultural demonstration, as well as a presentation of new research from various scholars. Featured keynote speaker N. Bruce Duthu will present Tribal Sovereignty and Juridical Spaces: Tribal Lands as Domains of Self-Determination, Subsistence and the Sacred. Tribal representation will include Atakapa-Ishak, Coushatta Tribe of Louisiana, Rosebud Sioux Tribe, United Houma Nation, Isle de Jean Charles Band, Biloxi-Chitimacha-Choctaw, Diné Nation and Pointe-au-Chien Indian Tribe. Sovereignty and the State will also feature Tulane adjunct professor and historian Laura D. Kelley, co-chair of the Second Annual Indigenous Symposium with her presentation, entitled Indigenous Challenges to Iberian Claims: First Nations in Spanish Colonial Louisiana.

The symposium will also take an interdisciplinary approach to questions of how Indigenous communities situate the struggles of the colonial period to the current context of a diminished coast, oil dependency and the rights to occupy ancestral land.

“In our region, with global issues that soon all coastal peoples will face, we must establish models that help us see and accept where we are and support us in being creative and respectful in our solutions,” said Rebecca Snedeker, executive director of New Orleans Center for the Gulf South.
