The workshop will include a session on how to craft and deliver effective elevator speeches. The program will be held from 2 p.m. to 5 p.m. on Friday, Sept. 27, at the Newcomb Institute on the third floor of The Commons.

Tulane University and Loyola University New Orleans are partnering to host Elect Her, a national nonpartisan training program aimed at empowering and encouraging women to take on leadership roles on and off college campuses.

Women make up half of the population, but less than one in four elected leaders are women. When women run, they win at the same rates as men, but there aren't enough women running.

“Research shows that engaging women in politics in high school and college is key to increasing the number of women in public office. More than 56% of congresswomen got their start in student government,” said Anna Mahoney, assistant professor of women's political leadership at Tulane.

The program will be held from 2 p.m. to 5 p.m. on Friday, Sept. 27, at the Newcomb Institute on the third floor of The Commons, 43 Newcomb Place.

300 Elect Her trainings have been held at 118 schools in 40 states and 4 countries, reaching over 15,000 college students.

The Tulane-Loyola Elect Her training will feature a panel with local politicians and community leaders. Currently, 84 percent of lawmakers in the Louisiana Legislature are men, and there are no women in our congressional delegation or in statewide elected offices.

Participants will discuss the importance of women running for office, examine the issues they care about, map out their support networks, craft and deliver elevator speeches, learn about campaign strategy, network with student government leaders on campus and will leave the training with a concrete plan to run for student or political office.

Elect Her focuses on women's leadership and welcomes all students. All Tulane and Loyola students (male, female, gender non-conforming) are welcome to participate. To register, contact Patricia Boyett, pboyett@loyno.edu
