Odom recently appeared in Glass Onion: A Knives Out Mystery and starred in the Sopranos prequel The Many Saints of Newark. He will also star in the upcoming Exorcist trilogy and has received an Emmy nomination for voice acting on the animated musical-comedy series Central Park. He is a passionate advocate for arts education, citing its influence on his own life and its capacity for inspiring empathy and connection.

As a musician, Odom has released four albums, with two, S-Curve and Simply Christmas, climbing to No. 1 on the Billboard Jazz charts. He has performed at the White House, Macy’s Thanksgiving Day Parade, Lincoln Center, Rockefeller Center and the Super Bowl. He is also the author of Failing Up: How to Take Risks, Aim Higher, and Never Stop Learning.

“Through their years at Tulane, our graduates engage in multi-disciplined learning, research, problem-solving and service, combining various fields of knowledge to attain expertise that can change the world,” Tulane President Michael A. Fitts said. “Who better to salute their achievements than Leslie Odom, Jr., whose remarkable career reflects the inspiration found in crossing genres and boundaries.”

Tulane commencements are known nationwide for their acclaimed speakers, as well as their unique New Orleans flavor that includes live jazz performances, second-lining graduates, Mardi Gras beads, a Gonfalon-led academic procession, fireworks and more Crescent City magic.
