

Help wanted: Krewe du VW

July 29, 2016 1:30 PM

Alicia Duplessis Jasmin aduples@tulane.edu

An illustration drawn by New Orleans based illustrator Mark Andresen shows Patrick Maguire driving his 1961 Volkswagen truck as a bell cow for the Tulane University Marching Band. (Image from Tulane Magazine)

Eight years ago, Patrick Maguire offered to lend his 1961 Volkswagen Transporter to help the Tulane marching band carry performance necessities including granola bars, a first aid kit and lots of water. Today the “VW” can still be seen leading the pre-game tailgating procession from the Lavin-Bernick Center to Yulman Stadium and trailing the marching band on Mardi Gras.

Barry Spanier, director of bands at Tulane is reaching out to the Tulane community with hopes of assembling Krewe du VW, a team of six people who will help with the upkeep of the all-electric truck housed on the uptown campus.

“This group of volunteers will be responsible for keeping the truck charged, driving it around campus once every two weeks to keep the engine clean and to mind the truck during football season and Mardi Gras,” said Spanier.

Fun fact: The Tulane VW truck was converted from gasoline to all-electric by owner Patrick Maguire. It can travel 20 miles on a full charge.

Tulane University

To keep from overworking the Krewe du VW Spanier plans to alternate each member's time on duty. The proposed schedule makes each person responsible for the truck only two months out of the year.

To qualify for a spot in the crew, you should:

1. Be a Tulane faculty or staff member.
2. Be comfortable driving a 1961 shift-gear vehicle in which the seat and steering wheel is not adjustable.
3. Have a valid driver's license.
4. Be a good representative of Tulane to the outside community.

To apply for the team send an email to Barry Spanier at bspanier@tulane.edu using the subject line "Krewe du VW."

Green Wave women's basketball coach Lisa Stockton, left, poses with Tulane director of bands Barry Spanier, right, in front of the 1961 Volkswagen Transporter. (Photo from Barry Spanier)