

Service providers

April 13, 2017 3:30 PM Photos by Paula Burch-Celentano, Sally Asher and Ryan Rivet
newwave@tulane.edu

More than 600 Tulane staffers from the New Orleans, North Shore and Mississippi campuses volunteered across the region to help local nonprofits for the Wave of Green Day of Service. Tulanians spent their morning spreading mulch, packing food, sorting Mardi Gras beads and sprucing up a school Thursday during the annual event.

Ingrid Rivera, a medical research specialist in the pathology department, paints a fence at Holy Rosary Catholic School in the Freret neighborhood.

Kristen Woods, right, with the Student Health Center, spreads pine needles under newly planted bushes outside the City Putt miniature golf course in City Park.

Adam Kanher, director of alumni relations at the law school, prepares beads for recycling at ARC of Greater New Orleans.

Tulane staff members bag bread at the Second Harvest Food Bank.

Jhanae James, a student in the Upward Bound program at Tulane, levels fresh mulch on a trail in the Couturie Forest in City Park.

Tulanians sort beads at ARC of Greater New Orleans.

Kyle Kelly, James Crump and Barri Bronston with Tulane Marketing and Communications and Kirby Messinger with Advancement Communications, left to right, help themselves to a lunch buffet at Yulman Stadium following the day of service.