

Tricentennial book explores New Orleans' global impact

December 01, 2017 2:15 PM Mary Cross
mcross3@tulane.edu

Tulane University faculty and alumni illuminate how the Crescent City impacted global history in 'New Orleans & The World: 1718-2018 Tricentennial Anthology.'
(Photo by Sally Asher)

New Orleans & The World: 1718-2018 Tricentennial Anthology is a collection of essays by leading scholars and local cultural icons that illuminates how the Crescent City has left its inimitable mark on global history.

The illustrated anthology was published through a partnership between the Louisiana Endowment for the Humanities \(LEH\), the New Orleans Convention and Visitors Bureau, the New Orleans Tourism Marketing Corporation and the 2018 NOLA

Foundation.

Richard Campanella, senior professor of practice in architecture and geography, Kara Tucina Olidge, executive director of the Amistad Research Center, and professor emeritus Lawrence N. Powell served on the book's editorial board.

"New Orleans & The World covers 300 years through a focus on New Orleans as a global city. That is, how did the world influence New Orleans, and how did New Orleans influence the world?" said Campanella. "I also contributed two chapters — one on physical geography and another on architecture and the built environment."

Brian Boyles, vice president of content for LEH and a 1999 Tulane University graduate, co-edited the work, which also features a foreword by University Professor Walter Isaacson and chapters written by Tulane alumni history professor Emily Clark, musicologist Michael White, archivist Sally Reeves, photographer Sally Asher and Erin Greenwald.

Greenwald's chapter looks at the city's role as the largest slave market in antebellum America.

"After the close of the international slave trade in 1808, New Orleans became a nexus for the domestic trade. I talk about the volume of men, women and children brought to New Orleans either on foot, in chain gangs or on steamships down the Mississippi River," said Greenwald, curator of programs at the New Orleans Museum of Art.

Greenwald, a 1999 Newcomb College graduate, also discusses local industries that sprang up around the slave trade, including health care and banking.

"Recognition of New Orleans' role is critical within the national narrative of American history and for understanding who we are as a city," said Greenwald.

Like this article? Keep reading: Tulane scholars contribute to tricentennial book

"How did the world influence New Orleans, and how did New Orleans influence the world?"

— Richard Campanella, senior professor of practice in architecture and geography