

Design language

August 08, 2018 2:00 PM Paula Burch-Celentano
pburch@tulane.edu

Tulane student Deja McLendon, far right, searches for online images for an assignment during Digital Design Foundations, a course offered in the School of Professional Advancement. Part of the school's Digital Design program, the course explores the nature of the graphic design, game art and animation, and interactive fields. This includes the study of oral and written communication for design practices, presentation techniques and the client-designer relationship.