This one-of-a-kind book festival will have a distinct New Orleans flavor with live jazz music, cooking presentations from several top chefs and some of the Crescent City's most colorful authors and political figures. Lively author discussions, moderated conversations, panel discussions, book sales and at least one major plenary session featuring a leading author will highlight each day.

"The Book Festival at Tulane University is Mardi Gras for the mind – a celebration of the written word and the joy of reading," Tulane President Michael A. Fitts said. "Book lovers and families with literary tastes ranging from bestselling fiction to current events to culinary delicacies will find plenty to choose from during this festival of letters."

"We are very excited about our schedule and our amazing author lineup. I look forward to experiencing the vibrant synergy between the authors and the audience. We hope book lovers from all around New Orleans and the surrounding communities will join the Tulane community in attending this rich, historical event and share the love of reading," said festival co-chair Cheryl Landrieu.

"It's a tremendous honor to welcome such a dynamic and talented group of authors, chefs and musicians to the Tulane campus. We believe our panels and sessions feature timely topics that will lead to lively conversations. We hope to attract and captivate book enthusiasts from all over, especially in the New Orleans and Tulane communities, for a three-day celebration of literature and culture," said festival co-chair Walter Isaacson, the Leonard A. Lauder Professor of American History and Values in Tulane's School of Liberal Arts.
