

Photos: Crescent City Changes

January 01, 2010 12:00 AM

Click to view larger photo with caption.

Bruce Greenstein, secretary of the Louisiana Department of Health and Hospitals, speaks at a session on health care and innovation during the conference, "New Orleans as the Model City for the 21st Century: New Concepts of Urban Innovation." (Photo by Sally Asher)

The conference audience listens intently to speakers at the day-long meeting on Oct. 1. Attending the sessions were leaders from government, academia, the business community and nonprofit organizations. (Photo by Sally Asher)

Judith Rodin gives a keynote address at the luncheon session. She is president of the Rockefeller Foundation, which provided support for the conference that was hosted by Tulane University. (Photo by Paula Burch-Celentano)

David Meyer, left, new dean of Tulane Law School, meets New Orleans Mayor Mitch Landrieu at the event in the Roosevelt Hotel in New Orleans. (Photo by Paula Burch-Celentano)

Fleur de lis decorations in Tulane colors, made by students at St. Michael's Special School, use the symbol that was popularized after Hurricane Katrina as a mark of New Orleans' rebirth. (Photo by Paula Burch-Celentano)

Tulane President Scott Cowen, left, and Mayor Mitch Landrieu enjoy a happy moment. They announced the launch of the Urban Innovation Challenge, stipends of $45,000 that will go to four social entrepreneurs. (Photo by Paula Burch-Celentano)