Do you like independent radio where you can hear anything from local New Orleans legends to jam bands to progressive rock? Then WTUL might be just what you're looking for.

For more than 50 years, WTUL-FM has been the musical voice of Tulane. Each spring the all-volunteer, student-run station holds its Rock On Survival Marathon fundraiser to make sure they can stay on the air.

The fundraising drive, which kicked off on March 9, includes live shows and events, and culminates with DJs conducting marathon stints as they broadcast from Pocket Park, located adjacent to the Lavin-Bernick Center. WTUL staff advisor Tel Bailliet told the Insider that it's an honor to be selected as one of the "few lucky DJs to broadcast and beg for money for 24-hours straight."

You never know who might show up to sit in with the DJs. Last year Tulane President Scott Cowen joined them.

The station is selling CDs and T-shirts to help with operational expenses and is happy to take donations as well. For more information about events or to make a donation, check out WTUL.
