

Ranking cites Tulane environmental science program

July 15, 2013 11:00 AM New Wave staff
newwave@tulane.edu

A newly released ranking of “39 Colleges Where Environmental Science Matters” includes Tulane University for having six different environmental science programs available. Tulane is No. 38 on the list.

The ranking was published by the Online College Database. According to the website, the 39 colleges and universities listed “offer students the widest variety of environmental science programs, allowing them to pick and choose the specialty that fits their academic and professional wants and needs.”

At Tulane, the Department of Earth and Environmental Sciences and the Department of Ecology and Evolutionary Biology collaborate to offer an interdisciplinary environmental science program within the School of Science and Engineering.

The College Database is a free, non-commercial website that provides current and future post-secondary students and their families with college- and career-related information.