

At your service

April 02, 2015 4:15 AM Photos by Paula Burch-Celentano and Ryan Rivet
newwave@tulane.edu

Paula Aubert, left, an administrative assistant with university relations and development, and Darryl Lewis, right, a commercial carpenter with facilities services, shovel sand on St. Ann Street during the annual Tulane Wave of Green Day of Service on Thursday (April 2).

Claire Ruswick, left, a librarian in the law school, and Mihnea Dobre, a staff architect with design services, share a laugh while pushing wheelbarrows near Scout Island in City Park.

Tulane volunteers fill the aisles in the back of the warehouse at Second Harvest Food Bank in Elmwood.

Lori Cole, a program manager in the Comparative Medicine Program, works the vegetable beds at Grow Dat Youth Farm in City Park.

Butsie Duhon, a painter with facilities services, does his part to level a lot in Mid-City.

Aimee Landreneau, a contract specialist in capital projects, pitchforks mulch into a wheelbarrow.

Nakia Bodley, left, and Julie Hauber, center, career counselors in the Freeman School of Business, sort sweet potatoes while Soleil McLaughlin, right, an athletic trainer with the Tulane Institute of Sports Medicine, seals a box full of the spuds.

A motley crew poses for a group shot in Mid-City. They are, from left to right, Erin Gordon, undergraduate admission; Sarah Varner, undergraduate admission; Sean Knowlton, Howard-Tilton Memorial Library; Adam Griego, undergraduate admission; David Corey, psychology department; and Evan Nicoll, developmentâ€“leadership giving.