

Katrina: Then and now

August 03, 2015 11:00 AM Alicia Duplessis Jasmin
aduples@tulane.edu

The following infographic appears in the August 2015 issue of Tulane magazine as a look back to the many changes that have occurred at the university since Hurricane Katrina impacted New Orleans 10 years ago. (Infographic by Tracey Bellina-Milazzo)

In That Number Far and Wide Since Katrina

THEN AND NOW Much has changed at Tulane as a result of Hurricane Katrina's wind and floodwaters 10 years ago. Enrollment has rebounded. Students step off campus more than ever for learning and involvement in the greater New Orleans community—and around the globe. Here are a few numbers that show a changing Tulane.

2 The public service graduation requirement for all undergraduates is two-tiered. Students must complete one lower-level service-learning course before the end of their sophomore year. For the second tier, they participate in higher-level service-learning courses or academic service-learning internships.

50+

Tulane enrolls students from almost every state in the nation—and many other countries. In 2014, 50 or more first-year students came from each of these states—California, New York, Maryland, New Jersey and Illinois (as well as Louisiana).

850

Tulane now partners with 850 community organizations in New Orleans. Working with these organizations, students and faculty engage in academic and volunteer service activities. Prior to Katrina, Tulane partnered with 265 local organizations.

13,531

The number of students enrolled at Tulane in all its schools in fall 2014 was 13,531. This number exceeds pre-Katrina enrollment, which was 13,214 during fall 2004.

242,000 1,600

Tulane students logged 242,000 hours of community service in 2012–2013. This number of hours is up 157 percent from 2006–2007.

Four hundred Tulane faculty and staff members volunteered 1,600 hours of community service at sites around the city during the university-sponsored 2015 Day of Service in April.

29,700

Tulane students in greater numbers are deciding to stay in New Orleans after they earn their degrees. 29,700 Tulane alumni reside in the city (out of approximately 109,000 living alumni).

1/3

In nearly 80 programs lasting a semester, summer or year, a third of Tulane undergraduates study abroad.

