

Helping hands

March 24, 2016 4:00 PM Photos by Paula Burch-Celentano and Ryan Rivet
rivet@tulane.edu

Tulane University employees Tiffanie Brown, center, and Nina Yang, right, detangle and sort Mardi Gras beads at The Arc of New Orleans on Thursday (March 24). The two were part of the sixth annual Wave of Green, a day of community service. Jessica Crutti, a senior administrative program coordinator in the Department of Comparative Medicine, plays a letter game with Tavion, a pre-K student at Lawrence D. Crocker Elementary School.

Jenny Daigle-Benoit, right, with annual giving, works to label bags of rice with Nicole Ralston of the Center for Public Service, second from left, Elise Lagarde with anesthesiology, and Lou Franchina with development at Second Harvest Food Bank in Jefferson.

Darryl Smith, a carpenter with facilities services, braves inclement weather while hauling mulch near Scout Island in City Park.

Clockwise from left, Cindy Bernard with capital projects, Matthew Winchester with public safety, Jessica Krinke with central development, and La'Tesha Hinton and Maeghan Livaccari with The Well converse while organizing Mardi Gras beads at The Arc of New Orleans.

Victoria Breyer, an administrative program coordinator at Tulane Law School, reads with Jah, a pre-K student at Lawrence D. Crocker Elementary School.