

Panel to address the current political landscape

September 20, 2016 1:15 PM New Wave staff
newwave@tulane.edu

An American flag flies on the Tulane University uptown campus. (Photo by Paula Burch-Celentano)

Two representatives of Tulane University will participate in a panel discussion Wednesday (Sept. 21) on “The Current Political Landscape.” The discussion, which will take place at the National Press Club in Washington, D.C., will be live-streamed beginning at 7 p.m. (EST) here.

The event is produced by Tulane University and will feature Tulane President Michael A. Fitts and associate professor of political science J. Celeste Lay.

The discussion will also feature John Breaux, retired U.S. Senator; Robert Livingston Jr., retired U.S. House of Representative; and Cokie Roberts, political commentator for ABC News and NPR. Steven Roberts, Shapiro Professor of Media and Public Affairs at George Washington University, will moderate.