

Feeling Bluedoo

October 04, 2016 2:30 PM Paula Burch-Celentano
pburch@tulane.edu

Runners of all ages, many in costume, participated in the Third Annual NOLA Bluedoo Party/Walk/Run on Saturday evening (Oct. 1) on Tulane's uptown campus. The event raises awareness of prostate cancer, and proceeds benefit the Prostate Cancer Research Fund at the Tulane Cancer Center.

Runners take off at the start of the Third Annual NOLA Bluedoo Party/Walk/Run on Saturday evening (Oct. 1) on Tulane's uptown campus. Over 700 runners and walkers registered to participate in the 2-mile race, which meandered through Tulane's uptown campus.

George Porter Jr., left, and Brian Stoltz play the blues and then some.

Runners participate in the event, which raises awareness of prostate cancer.

Proceeds benefit the Prostate Cancer Research Fund at the Tulane Cancer Center.

Friends Toni Savona, left, and Ann Trosclair, right, are eager to get their photo taken with NOLA Bluedoo Grand Marshal, actor and Tulane alumnus Christian LeBlanc, second from left, and fellow actor Sean Carrigan, far right.

Bluedoo is a celebration for prostate cancer survivors and their families.

New Orleans cuisine and big blue hair were the order of the day.